CELTIC STEPS – FUN FOR ALL AGES

Dancers of all ages kicking up their heels to lively Celtic music. Adorable 5-year-olds learning their first Irish steps. Dancers congratulating each other for mastering a challenging movement. Students preparing to perform for St. Patrick's Day or one of Boulder's many international festivals. It's just another day at Celtic Steps-Boulder.

The Boulder studio is a part of Celtic Steps, which is the largest Irish dance school in Colorado and offers classes all over the state. The school has won regional, national, and even world titles, which is impressive given the fierce competition from not only the east and west coasts of the U.S., but obviously from Ireland as well. the world to compete at the World Championships; last year the countries represented included quite a few that you wouldn't normally associate with Irish culture, such as Norway, Russia, Spain and Singapore.

Opened in May 2010, the Boulder branch of the school is rapidly growing and welcomes students of all ages. Many Irish dance schools cater almost exclusively to children, but this program is about half adult students. Instructor Elizabeth Barton notes "I've taught ages 4 to 72. I really believe that Irish dance is for everyone!" Students can expect a fantastic cardio workout in a casual, fun environment. "I encourage students to do whatever THEY want with Irish dancing," says Barton. "There's a place for everyone, whether you're a mature adult looking for a low-impact and fun way to exercise, a child who loves performing or a champion dancer with lofty competition goals."

Barton started dancing over 20 years ago. She's seen a lot of changes in that time, from costume styles to dance movements. "The competitive side is a lot like ice skating," she says. "Every year we are doing something even more difficult! Ten years ago I couldn't have even imagined some of the crazy stuff that the most competitive dancers do now. When I competed at the Worlds, I was just in awe of the other dancers. It's hard to keep up sometimes, but the sense of accomplishment is thrilling."

7-year-old Mateja fell in love with Irish dance a couple of years ago and was one of the founding members of Celtic Steps-Boulder. Her hard work and dedication have paid off, in spite of her young age she is one of the most advanced dancers in the school.

Assistant teacher Jessica Lesser competed on the 2 teams that won titles at the 2011 World Championships in Dublin, Ireland. As a soloist, she placed so well at the 2011 North American Nationals in Nashville, TN, that she is already qualified to dance at the 2012 Worlds in Belfast, Ireland. Lesser has been dancing since she was 3 years old and specializes now in teaching Celtic Steps-Boulder's youngest dancers.

6-year-old Adam has been dancing for just a few months but he already displays extraordinary talent and an amazing amount of focus for a dancer so young. He doesn't let the fact that he is currently the only boy in his class stop him. Like many dance forms today, Irish dance has a much higher number of female participants than male. "Boys should know this isn't just for girls!" says Barton. There's a deeply rooted tradition of male participation in Irish dance; in fact, the hard shoe dancing was done exclusively by male dancers until as late as the 1950s. Even today the male dancers maintain a unique set of movements and style of dancing.

The best thing about Irish dance is the variety it has to offer. Soft shoe steps and hard shoe steps are very different. Solo steps can vary from quite basic to challenging for even the most athletic. In addition, there's a wealth of traditional group dancing material (folk-type dancing) which is highly accessible to dancers who span a wide range of ability, experience, and age. Celtic Steps is proud to offer instruction in all types of Irish dancing.
